

Would you choose to be yourself?

If you say "no", you should seriously start thinking and do something. Anything. Because doing anything and acting foolish would still be better, than doing nothing at all. In the end having acted foolishly and having learned from mistakes will prove to be way better, than regretting all the things you could have done and you could have been, but never did and never really were.